DAY 2

Cut the Velcro in Half

Your dog's anxiety begins long before you leave. Today we reduce the dependency your dog has on your physical proximity — without any absence at all.

THE ACTION STEPS

1. Count how many times your dog follows you from room to room over a 1-hour period. Log this number.
2. Introduce a 'mat' or 'place' — a specific bed or blanket that will become your dog's calm reference point.
3. Every time your dog naturally settles on the mat (not when commanded), mark the behaviour with a calm 'yes' and drop a low-value treat.
4. Do NOT lure or command. Only capture naturally occurring settlement.
5. Practise moving around the house without letting your dog follow. Use a baby gate if necessary.
6. End session with 5 minutes of calm massage on the mat to build a positive mat association.

▲ COUNTER-INTUITIVE PRO-TIP

A velcro dog is a dog that has learned that distance from you predicts bad things. You are rewriting this prediction. Do not rush — one session of capturing relaxation is worth more than a week of obedience commands.

REFLECTION QUESTION

"Did your dog seem confused when you didn't follow your usual patterns? What did that confusion look like in their body?"

DAY 3 STARTS NOW

Day 3 is where most owners quietly give up.

Not because the protocol stops working. Because the free preview does.

Days 1 and 2 have opened something in your dog's nervous system. A window. A moment of neurological receptivity that — if you act on it now — becomes the foundation of everything that follows.

Day 3 is called Functional Relaxation. It is the cornerstone of the entire protocol. And it is where the real work — and the real transformation — begins.

What happens between Day 3 and Day 30:

By Day 7 — your dog settles on their mat without being asked.
By Day 14 — your departure triggers mean nothing. Keys, coat, shoes — all silent.
By Day 19 — you leave the house for the first time. Properly. And they are calm.
By Day 30 — 4 hours. Calm. Settled. Genuinely independent.

The owners who get there are not the ones with easier dogs. They are the ones who did not stop at Day 2.

Your dog is still in the window. Day 3 starts now.
